

A Peaceful Transition with Dignity

Choosing to stop dialysis is not giving up - it's choosing comfort, and quality of life. Our Dialysis Transition Program ensures that patients are surrounded by care, compassion and respect every step of the way.

When Dialysis No Longer Aligns with Comfort and Quality of Life

For many patients with end-stage renal disease, dialysis has been a life-sustaining treatment. But over time, the physical toll, emotional strain, and diminishing benefits may lead individuals and families to consider a different path—one focused on comfort, dignity, and peace.

Our Dialysis Transition Program offers a structured and supportive transition from dialysis to hospice care. This program is designed to guide patients and families through the process of discontinuing dialysis with expert clinical oversight, emotional support, and personalized care planning.

Let's Talk About What Matters Most

If you're considering dialysis withdrawal for yourself or a loved one, we're here to help. Contact us for a free consultation to explore your options and learn how our Dialysis Transition Program can support your journey.

What Happens When Dialysis Is Discontinued?

Stopping dialysis means the body will gradually stop filtering toxins and excess fluids. This natural process can lead to a range of symptoms, including:

- Fatigue and increased sleepiness
- Swelling (edema) in the legs, hands, or abdomen
- Shortness of breath
- Loss of appetite
- Confusion or agitation
- Nausea and itching
- Restlessness or anxiety

These symptoms are not signs of suffering—they are part of the body's transition. With the right care, they can be managed effectively and compassionately.

HOW THE DIALYSIS TRANSITION PROGRAM SUPPORTS YOU

Symptom Management
